Re: Head of the Canada Risk Office – Capital One

Dear Hiring Team,

At Moody's Analytics I hold delegated sign-off authority over the valuation, sensitivity, and ALM analytics delivered to institutional portfolios of $5-25bn per engagement – I am the person who releases the output or holds it back. That is independent process ownership in concrete form: understand how the analytics are built, test whether the controls around them hold, and be accountable when the numbers do not look right under a client's Head of Risk. It is the same discipline of ownership and accountability that a Canada Risk Office is built around, and it is why I am applying for the Head of the Canada Risk Office role.

Three parts of my current mandate map onto yours. Governance: I sit on Moody's model governance committee, which sets methodology review, documentation, and benchmarking standards for client-delivered analytics. Risk events: when portfolio sensitivities passed every internal check but failed economic review, I held the release for 48 hours, traced the defect to a curve-calibration edge case, escalated to product owners and the client's Head of Risk, and had the fix captured in permanent validation tests. Control remediation: I migrated a spreadsheet-driven valuation workflow into a logged, version-controlled Python pipeline, ran two shadow-mode reconciliation cycles, and closed the open governance audit finding.

Regulatory change execution is the other half of my background: at EY I delivered IFRS 17 and IFRS 9 transformation for Canadian and international insurers, translating new regulatory requirements into documented processes and readiness plans across actuarial, finance, IT, and program-management stakeholders. What draws me to Capital One Canada is the 1B construct – a first line that owns its risks directly instead of deferring judgment upward. My governance depth to date has been in quantitative and financial-reporting risk processes rather than consumer-card operations, and I would bring the same escalation and control discipline while building card-specific process fluency quickly. I am Toronto-based, available to interview immediately, comfortable with the three-day hybrid model, and able to start roughly four weeks after offer acceptance. Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,
